

The Metropolitan Planning Council's (MPC's) Executive Advisors are a group of regional CEOs (or highest-ranking regional corporate officers) who lend their names in support of the work of MPC and make an annual commitment of at least $15,000.

Starting with Bill Osborn of the Northern Trust as our first Executive Advisor in 2002, this exclusive group continues to add new members. A primary motivation for joining MPC's Executive Advisors is civic engagement and the desire to contribute to the vibrancy and vitality of Chicago and the surrounding region.

There are no required meetings, but individuals are welcome to become involved on issues of interest to them or their companies.

Benefits, such as visibility derived from partnering with a results-oriented organization, also include:

- invitations to exclusive networking events;
- workshops, panels and seminars featuring their peers;
- volunteer opportunities for an organization's senior executives through a variety of committee or project task forces;
- MPC "Lunch and Learn" presentation at the member's company, tailored to their company and employees' interests, and other exclusive access to MPC's content experts.

Executive Advisors are prominently featured on MPC letterhead, the website, in our Annual Report, and are listed in materials distributed to MPC's corporate partners and other donors.
