Loyola University Chicago developed a unique employer-assisted housing program that benefits its employees and promotes public transit.

Policy Background
Launched in March 2008, Loyola’s University Assisted Housing (UAH) program provides financial assistance for employees to purchase homes. Working in partnership with the Metropolitan Planning Council, Loyola created a program through which faculty and staff can receive forgivable loans to use toward closing costs or downpayment. Like other employer-assisted housing (EAH) programs, Loyola’s increases access to homeownership and affordability and encourages employees to live closer to work. EAH programs, like Loyola’s, also improve workforce stability, and the university benefits from increased employee engagement and reduced turnover.

Loyola’s program is unique in that it supports improved work-life balance for employees, fosters increased involvement in campus life, promotes public transit use, and spurs investment in the Chicago neighborhoods surrounding Loyola campuses. To be eligible for the program, employees must purchase homes in neighborhoods adjacent to the CTA’s Red Line. The program encourages employees to buy homes near the Red Line so they can conveniently use public transit to get to and from work. As Jennifer Clark, Loyola’s director of community relations, put it, “We want faculty and staff to be a part of our environmental goals and recognize they don’t need a car to work here.”

How It Works
Each year, the UAH program provides up to 25 eligible employees with a five-year forgivable loan. The program is open to both faculty and staff members. Participants must be in “good standing,” and have worked full-time for Loyola for at least one year. Loyola works with the Rogers Park Community Development Corporation (CDC) to provide pre-purchase homeownership counseling for program participants, which has been proven to help people avoid foreclosure. UAH participants must complete the three-hour Home Buyer Education and Counseling course, as well as a housing access plan with Rogers Park CDC. In addition, participants must qualify for mortgage financing and be able to pay at least $1,000, or one percent of the home’s purchase price (whichever amount is greater), from their savings.

Employees can purchase homes in any neighborhood between the Howard Street and Roosevelt Road stops on the CTA’s Red Line, including Rogers Park, Edgewater, Uptown, Lake View, Lincoln Park, the Near North Side, and the Loop. Employees who purchase homes in Edgewater and Rogers Park, the two neighborhoods closest to Loyola’s main campus, receive higher loan amounts.

The UAH loan amount is determined by the employee’s income level and location of the purchased property. Employees who make at or below 120 percent Area Median Income (AMI) — $89,900 for a family of four in 2009 — can receive a loan for $7,500 to live near the Red Line, and $10,000 to live in Rogers Park or Edgewater. Employees who make more than 120 percent AMI can receive $5,000 to live near the Red Line, and $7,500 to live in Rogers Park or Edgewater.

The loan period is five years, during which the loan-holder must remain employed by the university, maintain property ownership, occupy the property as his or her principle residence, and not refinance the property. If the employee follows all of these stipulations, the loan is forgiven after the fifth year. If the loan-holder does not meet these terms, the loan must be repaid immediately on a prorated basis.

Loyola University, Chicago: EAH Target Areas

[Map of EAH Target Areas]

Contact: Danielle Hanson, UAH Program Coordinator
Phone: 312.915.7510
Email: dhanson@luc.edu
Web site: www.luc.edu/hr